

ABSTRACT

Devices and methods are described for treatment of migraine headaches in a patient by selectively filtering out certain targeted portions of light within the visible spectrum from entering the patient's eye. In exemplary embodiments, contact lenses are disposed in one or both eyes of the patient for treatment. The lenses are preferably of a rust red or dark red color. It is also preferred that approximately 80% of the targeted portions of the visible spectrum be blocked.